(-es; pl. -e) 1. judgment, sentence, verdict; 2. opinion; judgment; decision; ein — über etwas fällen, to pass one's judgment or to give one's opinion upon something; meinem — nach, in my judgment compos. —sbuch, n. the records (of a court); —seröffnung, f. publication of a judgment or decree; —sfähig, adj 1. capable of judging; 2. capable of passing sentence; —sfindung, f. L. T. decision of a jury, finding of its verdict; —sgeist, m. love of giving one's opinion, passion for judging; —skraft, f. —svermögen, n. faculty of judgment (as distinguished from understanding and reason); —sschöpfung, f. L. T. the coming to a decision; finding of a verdict: —(s)spruch, m. decree, sentence, judgment; den —sspruch vollziehen, to execute the sentence; —stag, m. day of judgment; —steller or —sverfasser, m. one who draws up or prepares a sentence; —svoll, adj. full of judgment.

Syn. Urtheil, Abschied, Spruch, Erkenntniß, Bescheid. Abschied is distinguished from Urtheil, Spruch and Bescheid by this, that it is an opinion which contains the declared will of such persons who assemble at certain periods to deliberate upon public or national affairs, and form resolutions which obtain a legal power, as soon as they are confirmed by the head of the state. Urtheile, Sprüche and Bescheide, on the other hand, concern private affairs, but in such a manner, that the two first are only used for the decisions in suits of law. An Urtheil (judgment) is distinguished, however, from Spruch (sentence) or an Ausspruch, by being the decision of a law-judge or of a college endowed with judicial authority, whilst on the other hand a Spruch or an Ausspruch is also the decision of an arbitrator or the verdict of a jury. An Erkenntniß (decision) is as well the Urtheil of a court of law as the Spruch of a collective body of men versed in jurisprudence. A Bescheid is an answer, a decree, which superiors give to a representation or inquiry, and by which the party so inquiring or representing must regulate his conduct.

Úrtheilen, v. a. & n. (aux. haben) (über etwas) 1. to pass sentence, decide; 2. to judge; to form, give one's opinion.

Syn. Urtheilen, Beurtheilen, Richten. Urtheilen (form a judgment), that some thing is true or false, good or bad. Richten (to judge, decree), however, is to urtheilen after such a manner, that the Urtheil has a decisive power. Concerning learned works every one can urtheilen (form a judgment) but no one darf richten (pass sentence). He who beurtheilt (criticises) something, affirms or denies the perfection or faults of any object.

Úrtheilen, n. judging.
Úrtheiler, m. (-s; pl. —) + judge, person that draws up, or delivers a judicial sentence.

Verbergen, v. irr. I. a. to hide, conceal, keep from; II. reſl. to hide one's self (ſich vor . . , from), to abscond.

Syn. Verbergen, Verdecken, Verhehlen, Verheimlichen, Verſchweigen. In the first place, a person verbirgt (hides), for the sake of security, but the expression has been generalized so, that that is said to be verborgen, what is not known. We say that the ways of Providence are verborgen (hidden) from the human understanding. That is verſteckt, which is not intended to be seen; thus a person verſteckt (hides, secretes, conceals) something under his cloak or himself behind a door, &c. A person verhehlt something by preventing it from becoming known to those who have an interest in gaining a knowledge of it. A person verheimlicht, dissembles the truth, when he does not wish another to know it. A person, however, verſchweigt (passes over in silence, suppresses) that which he does not make known himself either by speech or writing. A Roman Catholic priest must verſchweigen what he hears in the confessional. A person verheimlicht (conceals, keeps secret) that which it is his bounden duty to reveal.

ein tief verbundenes Zwischendeck, a ship which is very high between decks.

Syn. Verbinden, Verpflichten; Verbindlichkeit, Pflicht. In English "bound" is a stronger expression than "obliged," in German verpflichtet is stronger than verbunden, and it is so used in the courts of law in both countries. A person having entered upon a new office, is verpflichtet (bound) by an oath to discharge its duties with truth and loyalty, to do which he was already verbunden (morally obliged) by his acceptance of the office. Verbindlichkeit is the moral necessity (obligation), Pflicht is the act which it is incumbent on a person bound by it to perform. One says therefore, to act in accordance with one's Verbindlichkeit, i. e. to fulfil one's moral obligations and to do one's Pflicht (duty).

sut, seine Zeit —, to waste one's time in indolence.

Verdénken, v. irr. a. (einem etwas) to blame for; to misconstrue.

Syn. Verdenken, Verargen, Verübeln. When a person thinks it wrong, injudicious or foolish on the part of another, he uses verdenken, and indeed because he considers that the other is principally injuring himself by what he is doing. But when that other person injures others by what he is doing, then the former thinks it wrong or wicked in him to do so, this he expresses by verargen. A person verdenkt it on the part of the buyer, when he gives more for an article, than it is worth, and on the part of the seller when he sells that article at a loss or under its fair market-value; both do not act rightly, but they only injure themselves. A person verargt it of a man otherwise estimable, if he lends money to a young spendthrift. For, by doing so, he injures another. When a person takes any thing ill or amiss, i. e. when he thinks that another has acted wrong towardsshim, he then uses verübeln.

Fall, a vexatious event; II. adv. irksomely, fretfully, &c., troublesomely, &c.; reluctantly.

Syn. Verdrießlich, Aergerlich, Grämlich, Launisch, Mürrisch. Verdrießlich and ärgerlich are distinguished from the rest by this, that the motives or reasons of the former are objective, whilst those of the latter are subjective. It is usual, therefore, to assign the cause or motive why a person is verdrießlich and ärgerlich. An impatient person soon becomes verdrießlich, if he is kept waiting too long, and a passionate person soon becomes ärgerlich, particularly if he thinks that it has been done on purpose. Moreover those persons are said to be ärgerlich, who are easily vexed about trifles; invalids, for instance, are generally ärgerlich. He that complains and laments, is grämlich; he that is mürrisch, is constantly finding fault; he that is launisch, is inconstant, at times pleased, at other times displeased, without having any just cause for either, sometimes he is grämlich and mürrisch, sometimes cheerful and contented. Children can easily be grämlich but not mürrisch, for they can complain but not find fault. Spoiled children, and women too delicately nurtured are launisch. Hence it appears that verdrießlich means sore, ärgerlich, indignant, touchy, testy, and also cross, peevish; grämlich is whining, fretful; launisch, capricious, fickle; and mürrisch, grumbling, scolding, snappish.

Verdrießlichkeit, f. (pl. -en) 1. fretfulness, moroseness, peevishness, ill humour; 2. irksomeness, troublesomeness, vexatious matter.

Verdrüßen, Verdrüßlich, vid. Verdrießen, Verdrießlich.

Verdrúß, m. (-ffes) 1. ill-will, indignation, anger, spite, pet; 2. vexation, trouble, chagrin; — machen, to vex, chagrin, spite; etwas zu eines —ffe thun, to do something to vex one; allen Menschen zum —ffe, to the vexation, in spite of, every body.

Syn. Verdruß, Aerger. Verdruß (originally the same as Plage) is merely the sensation or displeasure itself, which that causes us which any one does; Aerger is an anger, an irritation, which works more upon the feeling itself, than upon external objects. Verdruß depresses, Aerger excites the mind. When the injustice committed by others affects us nearly, it makes us sad; when we regard it as deserving of punishment, we ärgern und at it. Verdruß affects the mind, Aerger the gall. Hence it appears that Verdruß is vexation, Aerger annoyance, irritation. vid. also Mißvergnügen.

Verführen, v. a. 1. to transport, convey; 2. to lead astray, mislead; 3. fig. to seduce, corrupt, debauch; 4. to induce, lead.

Syn. Verführen, Verleiten, Betrügen. One verführt the will and verleitet the understanding. When one wishes to verführen a man, one endeavours to work upon his will and to deceive by exciting certain desires; when one wishes to verleiten another to a thing, he endeavours to work upon his understanding, and to deceive it by specious arguments. He that is verführt, acts therefore without reflection, the verleitete person reflects, but his judgment has been biassed or warped. A person verführt unprotected innocence, verleitet short sighted simplicity; verführen, therefore, is to seduce, and verleiten, to mislead, to misguide. He who raises a hope which he does not realize, and consequently deceives an expectation founded in full confidence in his word, betrügt (deceives). The Verführer (seducer) must often betrügen; he must raise hopes which he does not intend to fulfil or cannot, in order to lead astray (verführen).

Verhalten, n. (-s) 1. holding, retaining, retention, suppression; 2. behaviour, deportment, conduct, demeanour.

Syn. Verhalten, Aufführung, Betragen, Benehmen. The Aufführung of a young man is ascertained by many of his actions. They say, for instance, the Aufführung of a young man is good or bad. Verhalten is the agreement between our active and passive conduct, and the duties which we have to do under certain circumstances. In Betragen we consider acts in so far as they are merits or defects of the understanding and of the heart. Soldiers have sich verhalten (conducted themselves) well, in as much as they have performed their duty, and have sich betragen (behaved) well, in so far as that which they have done, is a proof of their valour, the chief virtue with persons of their profession. In the one instance, they have sich verhalten (kept themselves) strict to their duty, in the other they have sich betragen (borne or carried themselves) courageously and coolly. Benehmen is the result and sign of prudence, skill, address, pliancy, presence of mind, or else of the presence of these qualities. Thus, therefore, is "behaviour" and Aufführung "conduct."

Verkaúfen, v. a. to sell, vend, dispose of; mit Schaden —, to undersell.

Syn. Verkaufen, Verhandeln, Absetzen, Vertreiben. The parting with any article for a certain price is denoted by Verkaufen and Verhandeln. Verhandeln differs, however, from Verkaufen in this, that it alludes to or implies a longer or shorter negotiation, in which an agreement is entered into concerning the final conditions of the contract. The act of offering on both sides is called handeln. Such a handeln may last some time, when both parties are very intent upon increasing their own advantage, and hence Verhandeln frequently expresses Verkaufen together with the accessory idea of self-advantage, and is, therefore, used in a contemptuous sense. Absetzen, is selling the goods in so far as the stock of goods is lessened by their sale; this can take place by supplying a large order from one single person; when any one disposes of a great number of them to several buyers, and especially living remote from each other, then one says, he vertreibt them, or he carries on a large Vertrieb in this article. Hence Verkaufen is "to sell," Verhandeln "to bargain," Absetzen "to dispose of," and Vertreiben "to carry on business, to do business."

Verleúgnen, v. a. to deny, vid. Verläugnen.

Verleúmden, v. a. to backbite, calumniate, slander, traduce, defame.

Syn. Verleumden, Verunglimpfen, Lästern, Anschwärzen, Splitterrichten. He who verleumdet a person to others, relates to them false or unsubstantiated facts to the detriment of that person's character. He who verunglimpft him, judges his qualities or actions harshly, illiberally, odiously. The highest degree of Verunglimpfen is Lästern. For one lästert that person, on whose perfectly moral and honourable actions and in whose genuine good qualities one passes a judgment degrading in the highest degree. According to this definition, therefore, verleumden is "to backbite or to scandalise," for scandal is either false or not proved, Verunglimpfen is "to cry down, to detract from, to asperse," and lästern is "to calumniate, to slander, to vilify." Now verleumden and verunglimpfen together constitute anschwärzen, in so far as the person so verleumdet and verunglimpft, stood in good repute previously, and in so far as the motive for such scandal was the exciting of suspicion and distrust against him. This is therefore "to blacken, to libel, to traduce." Splitterrichten is to judge trivial, nay, the most trifling faults with too much severity. It has generally for its object that of convincing others of one's own immaculate conduct and of inducing others to form a high opinion of the strictness of one's own principles. This is "to carp, or cavil at," or more familiarly but more correctly "to pick holes, to run down."

Vermögend, adj. 1. powerful strong; 2. able; 3. rich, opulent, wealthy.

Syn. Vermögend, Bemittelt, Wohlhabend, Begütert, Reich. The two first denote a man, who possesses sufficient property or means to secure himself some degree of comfort. Wohlhabend expresses a greater amount of property or means. A man is wohlhabend, when he has a competency and when his income enables him to procure all the comforts which his station in life and his habits can rationally desire. Begütert is stronger still than wohlhabend and is principally said of those, whose property either entirely or partly is vested in land or tenements. Reich is the highest term, and expresses a great superabundance of all temporal possessions. Vermögend is, therefore, "substantial," bemittelt "of somes means," of means," wohlhabend "well off, independent, or well to do," begütert, "of real property," and reich, "rich or wealthy."

Syn. I. Vernehmen, Hören. We hear (pleura) a sound, when it generally makes an impression on our organs of hearing, but we only vernehmen it, when we distinguish it; hence vernehmen in this sense is "to hear distinctly."

Syn. II. Vernehmen, Verstehen. In order to understand a speech fully, it is necessary, first, that we properly distinguish the syllables and words, of which it is composed, and secondly, that we sufficiently recognize the sense of the speech by means of these words and their context. But to do this, it is further requisite, that we be sufficiently acquainted with the language employed by the speaker, and with the subject he discourses upon. Hence it is evident that however distinctly a person may vernehmen (hear; or catch the words, which the speaker utters, he will be totally unable to verstehen (understand) him

Verſiegen, v. n. (aux. ſeyn) to dry up, become dry, to sink gradually into the ground, be drained, be exhausted; to decay.

Syn. Verſiegen, Vertrocknen, Verdorren. Vertrocknen is not only used when speaking of water, but of any moisture, and even of things which lose their moisture; it is "to dry up." Verdorren is only said of things, which together with the moisture lose the nourishing juices, without which their life cannot be supported and this is "to wither up." Verſiegen merely denotes the diminution of the depth and the total disappearance of the moisture in any reservoir. A source, a stream verſiegt, (dries up, fails, becomes empty).

Verſiegt, adj. dry, drained, emptied.

Verſöhnen, v. a. 1. to reconcile; conciliate; 2. to propitiate, atone; 3. to appease; to expiate; ſich mit einem —, to reconcile one's self, be reconciled with one.

Syn. Verſöhnen, Ausſöhnen, Sich wieder vertragen. Sich wieder vertragen with a person merely means to restore unanimity between that person and one's self. Verſöhnen and ausſöhnen, to forgive the injuries occasioned by him, and to wish to live no longer in enmity with him. Sich vertragen, therefore, only puts away dissension, and hence it is said of all persons who live in harmony, that they vertragen ſich (agree well, are friendly together); those persons, therefore, vertragen ſich (agree together again), who were merely separated by differences of opinion. They who ſich verſöhnen (become reconciled to each other), had lived in hostility, hated each other and mutually endeavoured to be revenged. The persons who had lived in friendship with each other must be ausgeſöhnt (made friends again, must make it up again).

Syn. I. Verſtellen, Verunſtalten, Entſtellen. Verſtellen merely denotes, that a man by an alteration of his figure has become difficult to be recognized, without deciding, whether he has become uglier in consequence of his alteration. Verunſtalten denotes that his figure has lost more or less of its beauty and perfection. Entſtellen expresses both these ideas together; he who is entſtellt, is uglier and less perfect as to his form, and in consequence of this impairment has become so changed as not to be recognized. Every kind of mutilation verunſtaltet (impairs) a man; but it does not follow, that it verſtellt (disguises), and entſtellt (disfigures) him, if it does not at the same time render it impossible or very difficult for people to recognize him.

Syn. II. Verſtellen (ſich), Stellen (ſich). Sich verſtellen is not to allow one's real opinions to be known; ſich ſtellen is to endeavour to palm off upon another as one's opinions those which are not so in reality; the first is, therefore, "to dissemble," the second "to feign, to simulate." The antitheſis between them is shown in the Latin line:—"Quod non es simulas, dissimulasque quod es." Du ſtellſt dich (das zu ſeyn, was du nicht biſt), und du verſtellſt dich (das zu ſeyn, was du biſt).

Syn. Vertrauen, Trauen, Verlaſſen (ſich). These words signify the expectations we form of the power and will of another. We trauen (trust) him, when we simply apprehend no evil at his hands, we vertrauen (confide in) him, when we expect good at his hands. As we can only expect good from God, and since it is utterly impossible, that he can wish any thing evil, it would be too feeble an expression to say we trauen (trust) him; we must vertrauen (confide in) him. The expectation, that lies at the root of these ideas may have different degrees of certainty; the highest of which is expressed by ſich verlaſſen (to rely) upon some one or something.

Verweisen, v. ir. a. 1. to refer to; 2. to banish, relegate, proscribe, exile, outlaw: 3. to rebuke, reprove, reprimand, reprehend, chide, check, to upbraid. exprobate, reproach.

Syn. Verweisen, Vorhalten, Vorwerfen, Verrücken, Aufmutzen. We accuse or charge any one with a fault, when it is still uncertain whether he has committed it or not, in order that he may be enabled to justify or excuse himself or merely acknowledge it. This act is expressed by vorhalten. We admonish or rebuke him for it with the view of effecting an amendment of conduct in him. Thus is verweisen. We reproach him with it (throw it at his teeth, to his face) when we mention with a view of annoying him. This is vorwerfen. Verrücken is only a stronger expression, implying a fuller detail of the matter; it is to upbraid him with it. Aufmutzen adds to vorwerfen the accessory idea, that one magnifies the blame of the erring party by giving greater importance to a mere peccadillo than it really has; it is "to be too sharp upon, to rate"; vid. also Verbannen.

Syn. Verweisen, Verhalten, Verwerfen, Verrücken, Aufmutzen. We accuse or charge any one with a fault, when it is still uncertain whether he has committed it or not, in order that he may be enabled to justify or excuse himself or merely acknowledge it. This act is expressed by verhalten. We admonish or rebuke him for it with the view of effecting an amendment of conduct in him. This is verweisen. We reproach him with it (throw it at his teeth, in his face) when we mention with a view of annoying him. This is verwerfen. Verrücken is only a stronger expression, implying a fuller detail of the matter; it is to upbraid him with it. Aufmutzen adds to verwerfen the accessory idea, that one magnifies the blame of the erring party by giving greater importance to a mere peccadillo than it really has; it is "to be too sharp upon, to rate"; vid. also Verbannen.

Vormalig, adj. former, vid. Vorig.

Vormals, adv. formerly, in former times, afore-time, heretofore.

Syn. Vormals, Vor Zeiten, Ehemals, In dieſem, Vor Alters, Weiland. The most remote and venerable antiquity is denoted by vor Alters (in ancient times). Vor Alters (in early ages, in olden times, in times of yore) men reached a more advanced age than now. Vor Zeiten (in former times) does not designate so remote a period, nevertheless it is distinguished from vormals and ehemals by its pointing out an intermediate time of several ages, whilst vormals and ehemals may signify a time past in the same generation or age. One says then: In former times (vor Zeiten) the nobles of Europe lived in their castles and in a constant state of feud. When vormals and ehemals are used of a period of time that is past, the former denotes a comparison with the present. This is denoted by "formerly." Vor dieſem (ere now, before this) denotes quite an indefinite past time, which may have formed part of the life-time of the speaker, or may have been before his time. Weiland (heretofore) is in common life obsolete; it is still used in the chancery style, and is equivalent to ehemals.

Syn. Vorrede, Vorbericht. It is expected that a Vorbericht (advice to the reader) should be short, and that a Vorrede (preface) should be longer. In the Vorbericht, therefore, only certain circumstances are commonly mentioned, which may be useful for the reader to know. In a Vorrede this is done not only more diffusely, but even the object and utility of the book, of the manner, in which the reader ought to use it, of the importance of the subject, matter, &c. are mentioned. In English an Introduction is usually somewhat longer than a Preface; Vorbericht (preamble) may therefore be safely rendered by Prefare and Vorrede by Introduction.

Wáffe, f. (pl. -n) 1. weapon, arms, instrument of attack or defence; —n, claw, talon of an animal; vid. Waffen: 3. T. tools, instruments.

Syn. Waffen, Gewehr, Rüstung, Geschütz, Stück, Geschoß. Waffen, Gewehr and Rüstung are first of all each instrument of war as the warrior carries at or on his body; Geschütz (artillery ordnance) such as follow the army and are drawn by animals, as cannon. The word Waffen (weapons) denotes in its most extended sense every thing that can be used for attack, for defence or protection; hence even such limbs of animals as serve for attack or defence are called Waffen, as, horns, teeth, claws, &c. In the more limited sense we understand by Waffen (arms) the artificial portable instruments which the warrior uses as well for attack as defence. Under the word Rüstung we understand all the usual artificial Waffen of the warrior as well for attack as for protection; his accoutrements or equipment, or else his mail, helmet, harness, armlets and greaves or in a word his "armour." Gewehre comprise only instruments of attack and not weapons of defence; they are "arms of offence." The word Stück is used for single cannons (= "piece"), thus we have brei-, fehd-, zwölfpfündige Stücke, three pounders, six-pounders, twelve pounders. The word Geschoß is now obsolete as a military term, though still used by poets; it corresponds to the English "bolt or shaft."

Warten, v. I. n. (aux. haben) 1. to stay; 2. wait; attend; warte ein wenig, stay a little; ich kann nicht lange —, I cannot stay long; auf einen or etwas —, to stay or wait for, to expect a thing; seines Berufs, seiner Arbeit, seines Amtes —, to mind, attend, perform, execute, ply one's business, office; II. a. to attend to; to take care of, to tend, nurse; die Heerde — to tend the flock.

Syn. Warten, Abwarten, Erwarten. The main idea conveyed by warten (to wait) is that of remaining in the same situation, (in one place or position) without requiring any secondary idea to complete its full meaning. I have gewartet (waited) here more than an hour, merely says: I can no longer remain inactive, I must resolve upon something. Abwarten (await) adds to the idea of warten the preponderating secondary idea of continuing or persevering until the desired result is obtained, which puts an end to the warten. Finally erwarten (to expect) is distinguished from both by the prominent accessory idea of something about to happen. According to the nature of this something is the erwarten either agreeable or disagreeable; vid. also Harren.

Warten, n. (-s) staying, waiting; attending.

Syn. Welle, Woge, Brandung. A Welle is a less elevation of water, a Woge and likewise a Brandung is a more considerable one. There are, therefore, Wellen in every sheet of water, in the smallest rivulets as well as on the sea, Wogen only on the sea and large rivers, and Brandung only at sea. A Brandung is a foaming and raging number of Wellen on steep coasts or sunken rocks in the sea. The latter, therefore, is "surge, surf," and over sunken rocks "breakers." Woge is "billow" and Welle "a wave."

Syn. Werth, Preis, Gehalt. The judgment arrived at concerning the goodness of things is their Werth (worth). The Preis (price) is that, which is considered equal to the Werth of anything, especially in money. The Preis of things can rise or fall, without their innerer Werth (real value) being increased or lessened. The Gehalt is the real value of the nobler metals and of the coins struck from them. Gold and silver, for instance, are alloyed with base metal; the less, therefore, they contain of alloy, by so much the higher, and the more they contain of it, by so much the lower is their Gehalt (that is standard).

Syn. Wetter, Witterung. Witterung denotes those changeable circumstances, which commonly change according to the difference of climates and seasons, the Wetter those which change under the same climate and during the same season of the year. Witterung signifies the nature of the atmosphere during a longer period of time, Wetter during a shorter. The Germans say: it is beautiful Wetter (weather,), when the sun shines and it is not rainy or windy; on the other hand the Witterung (climate or weather) is by so much the more severe in a country, the further it lies to the north. They say, moreover, to-day is beautiful Wetter (weather), but then spring, this summer, &c. we have beautiful Witterung In English "weather" has both significations, and "climate" or "season" can seldom be substituted for it in translating Witterung.

Zinsbar, adj. subject to rent; tributary.

Zinsbarkeit, f. state of being tributary, &c.

Zinſe, more usually Zinſen, pl. f. interest, use; auf —n ausleihen, to put out upon interest; die —n bezahlen, to pay the interest; —n von —n, interest upon interest, compound interest; compos. —nausgleich, m. balance of interest; —nberechnung, f. interest account; —nfuß, m. rental; —nrechnung, f. rent-account; —ntabelle, f. table of interest; —nverzinſung, f. —nwucher, —nzins, m. compound interest.

Syn. Zinſen, Renten, Einkünfte. Zinſen and Renten consist only of that which is given or received for the use of a piece of ground or of capital. Einkünfte, on the other hand, comprehend all kinds of useful things, which come in, as it were, yearly to any one. The merchant reckons up the profits of his trade, the artist the payments for the productions of his art, the person on pay counts in his pay as part of his Einkünfte, as well as doing so with his Renten and Zinſen. In general Renten are opposed to the Einkünfte from a salary or from the profit of a trade; they also include the Zinſen of one's capital (compare Miethzins, Pachtzins). Zins and Rente are distinguished, however, thus, that Zins (interest) signifies that sum, which the giver is obliged to pay and which the capitalist or proprietor has the right of demanding; else Rente (rent), however, in as much as the proprietor or capitalist receives it and by that means increases his Einkünfte (income). Hence it will be seen that Zins and Rente, especially the former, do not exactly mean the same thing which "interest and rent" do in English.

Syn. Zorn, Grimm. Grimm is distinguished from Zorn internally by the greater degree of its strength acting on the senses and the passions, and externally by the violence of the expression of the looks and gestures. Grimm is an excess and cannot long continue in its fits and convulsive effects; it consumes itself. Zorn (wrath, anger) disfigures the human face, but not so much as Grimm, nay, there may be a noble Zorn (anger), a beautiful Zorn (passion); but a woman, that is ergrimmt (furious), is something horrible. Grimm is therefore "fury, frantic passion."

Zutragen, v. ir. I. a. to carry to, bring; fig. vulg. to report; II. refl. to happen, fall out, come to pass, to chance.

Syn. Zutragen (ſich), Geſchehen, Ereignen (ſich), Begeben (ſich), Vorgehen, Verfallen. Geſchehen (to happen, take place) is spoken of all events or changes; it is the result of doing. If any one does any thing, it geſchieht (takes place); e. g. "Light the candle!" — "It is already geſchehen (done)." The same is expressed by vorgehen (to come to pass), but with the joint idea, that that which vorgeht excites especial attention and interest. Precisely this extent of meaning is possessed also by verfallen (to fall out or upon), but with the secondary idea, that that which verfällt (happens), happens unexpectedly. A change which excites peculiar attention, alters the state of things, and with which a longer succession of changes founded on it and consequent upon each other, begins — such a change bright ſich (happens, betides); it is a Begebenheit (event, incident). When one considers an event with respect to its changes, whether it is regarded as an effect of physical necessity or considered as a mere effect of chance, then one says, it hat ſich zugetragen (has been brought about). It sometimes chances, happens, turns out (trägt ſich zu), that continued rainy weather spoils the harvest. Ereignen (to befal) is used in speaking of certain important circumstances, in as far as they have their peculiar consequences, and hence cause several changes. At the entry of the king, the chance ereignete ſich (the event occurred, it happened) that a scaffolding broke, by which many persons lost their lives.

TABLE OF CLASSIFICATION OF THE IRRELEVANT VERBS.

REMARK.—From this table must be excepted the sixteen irregular verbs, which in our list form the eighth class.*

Number of the class.	Infinitive.	Imperfect.	Past Participle.	Infinitive.	Imperfect.	Past Participle.
I.	e	a	e	Sehen, to see,	ſah,	geſehen.
II.	e	a	o	Helfen, to help,	half,	geholfen.
	i			Sinnen, to reflect,	ſann,	geſonnen.
III.	i	a	u	Trinken, to drink,	trank,	getrunken.
IV.	a	ie	a	Fallen, to fall,	fiel,	gefallen.
V.	ei	ie	ie	Schreiben, to write,	ſchrieb,	geſchrieben.
		i	i	Beißen, to bite,	biß,	gebiſſen.
VI.	ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü.	o	o	Schießen, to shoot,	ſchoß,	geſchoſſen.
VII.	a	u	a	Schlagen, to beat,	ſchlug,	geſchlagen.

EXPLANATORY REMARKS.

I. The first class changes the radical vowel e into a in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Geben, to give; imperfect gab; past part. gegeben. To this class must be added: bitten, to entreat (beg), which changes the radical vowel i in the same manner, as: imperfect bat; past part. gebeten.

II. The second class changes the radical vowel e or i into a in the imperfect, and in the past participle into o. Ex. Nehmen, to take; imperf. nahm; past part. genommen; gewinnen, to win; imperf. gewann; past part. gewonnen. To these must be added, gebären, produce (to give birth to), which has ä instead of i in the root, as: imperf. gebar; past part. geboren.

III. The third class changes the radical vowel i into a in the imperfect, and in the past part. into u. Ex. Schlingen, to sling; imperf. ſchlang; past part. geſchlungen; except dingen, to hire; imperf. dung; past part. gedungen; ſchinden, to flay; imperf. ſchund; past part. geſchunden; and thun, to do; imperf. that; past part. gethan.

IV. The fourth class changes the radical vowel a into ie in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Halten, to hold; imperf. hielt; past part. gehalten; except fangen, to catch; imperf. fing; past part. gefangen. The following conform to the principle of the rule, resuming in the past part. the radical vowel or diphthong of the present: laufen, to run; imperf. lief; past part. gelaufen; gehen, to go; imperf. ging; past part. gegangen; heißen, to order; imperf. hieß; past part. geheißen; rufen, to call; imperf. rief; past part. gerufen; ſtoßen, to push; imperf. ſtieß; past part. geſtoßen.

V. The fifth class changes the radical vowel ei into ie in the imperf. and in the past part. or before a double consonant into i. Ex. Bleiben, to remain; imperf. blieb; past part. geblieben; ſchneiden, to cut; imperf. ſchnitt; past part. geſchnitten.

VI. The sixth class changes the radical vowels: ä, au, e, i, ie, ö, ü, into o in the imperf. and past participle. Ex. Schwären, to fester; imperf. ſchwor; past part. geſchworen; ſaugen, to suck; imperf. ſog; past part. geſogen; ſaufen to drink to excess; imperf. ſoff; past part. geſoffen; heben, to lift; imperf. hob; past part. gehoben; verwirren, to embroil (to confuse); imperf. verworr; past part. verworren; bieten, to offer; imperf. bot; past part. geboten; ſchwören, to swear; imperf. ſchwor (ſchwur); past part. geſchworen; lügen, to lie; imperf. log; past part. gelogen.

VII. The seventh class changes the radical vowel a into u in the imperfect, and resumes it in the past participle. Ex. Wachſen, to grow; imperf. wuchs; past part. gewachſen; ſtehen, to stand, has ſtand in the imperfect (formerly, however, ſtund), and in the past part. geſtanden.

* The 5th and 6th classes include the greater part of the irregular verbs.

[v] The verbs Rathſchlagen, Berathſchlagen, to consult, deliberate, are regular.

† Those which have in the past participle t, and in the imperfect of both modes te, like the regular verbs, but which change the radical syllable, except in Sollen and Wollen, which are regular in the past participle and in the imperfect of both modes.

REMARK.—It must not be forgotten, that the derivative and compound verbs, of inseparable or separable particles, must be sought for under their primitives. Ex.: Entwerfen, to project, and Verwerfen, to reproach, under Werfen, to throw: Ausgehen, to go out, under Gehen, to go; Verſchreiben, to prescribe, under: Schreiben, to write, &c.
